The State of Women in the Construction Industry in 2020

[Article was originally posted on www.constructconnect.com]

By: Holly Welles,

Women have been getting into more diverse fields over the last few decades. Maybe the trend is because of changing ideologies or the economic situation, or maybe there's just a need for more workers in these areas. Whatever the reason, women are starting to put their marks in industries that were previously dominated by men.

The construction industry has changed a lot in the last decade. Rapidly advancing technology has created a lot more positions to be filled, and gender is not an issue. All around the world, women have stepped up to fill those vacant roles.

Changes in Construction Employment Over the Decades

Women in construction have been rising in numbers since 1985. Things peaked in 2006 when there were 1.1 million women in the construction industry in the United States.

In subsequent years, the numbers have fluctuated, likely due to the economic crisis in America after 2008. As of 2017, when an estimated 971,000 women worked in construction, 9.1% of them made up the entire industry in the United States.

Around the world, the numbers are slightly different and speak to the possibility of changes in U.S. recruitment and retention. Currently, Australia leads the way with 15.9% of the construction workforce being women. Japan falls close behind, with women making up 15% of the industry. These numbers are impressive considering the significant gap seen in North America.

Increasing Wages and Incentives

While not a very large demographic, women in construction still make 95.7% of the pay their male counterparts earn. This wage gap is in stark contrast to the 82% that's seen across all industries in entirety. For women, construction offers a lot of opportunities that most other male-dominated fields seem to be less able to provide.

Some of these extra incentives were helped along by organizations like NEW, Nontraditional Employment for Women, which was established in New York City in 1978 for low-income women. Across the United States and around the world, there are workforce development programs like NEW that open the door for women wanting to break into these industries.

They exist not only to help women enter these roles but also to build these industries up by looking beyond gender and toward the bigger picture.

Acceptance in the Construction Industry

In a 2019 CNBC story by Courtney Connley, Amanda Gray, national architectural and commercial account manager for The Dow Chemical Co., shared stories about trying to prove her authority during meetings. She said that in those instances, most of the men support her in the face of demeaning behavior.

In response to one situation where a male consultant tried to quiz her on basic construction knowledge, she said, "The good thing is I had built credibility with these people in the past and someone stepped in and said, 'I can't believe you would ask her that question.'"

Acceptance among co-workers is a hit-or-miss venture that must be carried out one step at a time. Women undoubtedly will continue to face challenges in a male-dominated workforce. Fortunately, the industry is increasingly accepting women and providing the tools they need to thrive.

This can be seen in the increase in supplies aimed to meet women's needs. Recently, there have been pushes to provide more lines of safety apparel made for female construction workers specifically, such as gloves, hard hats, and soft-shell jackets. This equipment must fit correctly, or it could become a detriment to safety rather than an aid. When these supplies aren't available, companies send the message that they aren't prepared to hire women.

Recruiting and Retaining More Women in Construction

The construction labor shortage has made rethinking recruitment efforts a necessity. This also makes the time ripe for organizations to further explore how to help women find success in the construction workforce.

The Canadian Apprenticeship Forum has recently launched a task force comprised of 48 organization representatives across the trades. Their strategy is to supply companies and colleges with best practices to increase the participation and retention of women in these programs. Then, they hope to track outcomes and provide actionable data on strategies discussed for years.

Construction and trade organizations can start taking real action in 2020 to encourage more

A Celebration of the life of Stephanie Lazio Cincotta

Stephanie Lazio Cincotta
1928 - 2019

Stephanie Lazio Cincotta, born in San Francisco 1928, an extraordinary woman of many talents, and longtime resident of San Rafael, died at home at the age of 91 on December 19, 2019. First and foremost Stephanie was a child of God who counted on her faith to help her through life. She married Serge L. Cincotta in 1948. In 1968 Stephanie became a Marine Corp Momma. In 1969 her title was extended to Gold Star Mother, compliments of her son, Tommy. Stephanie stepped up as the family anchor. When the sea was churning, the boat was drifting, she was the calm resilient force that held everything in place. Stephanie was a strong and kind woman who reflected another time. She valued the people around her. She was a lady who seemed to navigate by the Spirit of God within her, rather than what anyone presented to her. She was savvy, soaking up the lessons of the past to run a successful business (Alioto-Lazio Fish Co.) in a place that spits out the weak and unprepared.

She was a good person, the kind you could rely on - salt of the sea, a beam of light on a foggy night. She is preceded in death by her parents, Tom and Annetta Lazio, her loving husband, her son, PFC Thomas A. Cincotta (Silver Star Recipient), her brother, Lorenzo Lazio and one grandson. She is survived by her loving children, Mary Ann (Robert) Shepherd, Stephanie T. (Eric) Jorgensen, Annette (Thomas) Traverso, S. Joseph (Rebecca) and Angela; nine grandchildren, five great grandchildren, her brother, Lawrence Lazio, and brother-in-law, Antone G. Cincotta Jr. along with nieces and nephews. Finally, she is survived by her loving sons of USMC Lima Unit 3/9. Rosary service 7 P.M on Tuesday, January 7th, 2020 followed by Funeral Mass Wednesday the 8th at 10 A.M. both at Saint Sebastian Catholic Church 373 Bon Air, Greenbrae, CA 94904. In lieu of flowers, Mom preferred Spiritual Bouquets or donations to either St. Vincent de Paul dining room in San Rafael or the Shrine of St. Jude in San Francisco. Care to Establish and Succeed in a Remote Career? Here's What to Focus Upon

[Article was originally posted
<https://goremotely.net/>]

A general statement that every worker in the world wants a better work-life balance is undeniably and unequivocally true. Each profession, no matter how much you enjoy it, takes a toll on your body and mind. This especially resonates with those working 9-to-5, having to attend countless monotone meetings, and working with larger collectives.

Pursuing a successful career can be formatted in a more flexible, healthier, less stressful, and overall more productive way. Millions of companies are of this opinion as well. This is why they start to introduce or have fully embraced the <https://goremotely.net/blog/remote-working-statistics>

What is Remote Work?

Everything you need to know about it is already in its name. It means you get to work on your schedule, from your own choice of location, as long as you get the work done.

There is an increased level of freedom, from little things such as not having to be dressed formally (but rather in that old pair of pajamas you adore) or being able to take as many breaks as you want, to much more important conveniences such as curving all that stress from commuting and coworking and tailoring your days to personal habits.

Why Corporates Let People Work This Way?

It is much more convenient for everyone - both employers and employees. The corporate, however, focus on sparing massive amounts of money they have to spend on maintaining a professional environment, while your reasons are more personally related.

Namely, once your company gives you a partly-remote or a full remote schedule, they get to save on employees' transportation costs, utilities, office supplies, etc. For one person, these costs are invisible. For, say, 200 workers, the costs are quite significant.

Also, studies say that people get much more productive this way. Once they don't have to be worried about what is happening back home during their workhours, their focus and work stamina skyrocket.

What Are Some of the First Steps?

Well, first and foremost, you'll have to bear in mind that research is key. Before you consider venturing into a remote career, it is best to invest a fair portion of your time in getting as informed as possible. In the age of the internet, we are lucky to have pages and pages of people's thoughts, experiences, and opinions at the tip of our fingers.

Try to utilize all of this info by soaking up whatever you can. Do not just focus on the positive, but rather scrutinize every aspect of this work model. People rarely find it is not for them; still, you know your habits best.

Once you decide to try the model, examine if remote work is available at your company. The old saying says, 'Ask, and you shall be given.' Your employer could be happy to help you raise your productivity and work-life balance. If the company has no remote work policy and you are stubborn to reap the benefits of telecommuting, you can always jump to another, remote work-oriented company.

If you start working remotely, make sure to set your priorities straight. Remember the main reasons why you nosedived into a remote career. If you want to focus on your health and overall wellness, use the extra time to improve your habits - work out, sleep well, eat healthily, and dismiss any smaller stress effectors. You are soon to experience the change brought to your life by a much less strict timetable.

In case the family is your priority, plan your workdays accordingly. Taking care of your children, putting time and effort into their nourishment, education, and overall upbringing is incredibly important and will take a massive chunk of your day.

Ready to Grow Your Business?

How to Get a Small-Business Loan in 5 Steps

[Article was originally posted on www.nerdwallet.com]

By Steve Nicastro & Teddy Nykiel

1. Ask yourself, why do I need this loan?

Lenders will ask you this question, and your answer will likely fall into one of these four categories:

- To start your business.
- To manage day-to-day expenses.
- To grow your business.
- To have a safety cushion.

2. Decide which type of loan is right for you.

Your reasons for needing the loan will dictate the type of small-business loan you get.

If you're starting a business, it's virtually impossible to get a loan in your company's first year.

Lenders require cash flow to support repayment of the loan, so startups are typically immediately disqualified from financing.

Instead, you'll have to rely on business credit cards, borrowing from friends and family, crowdfunding, personal loans or a microloan from a nonprofit lender. Here's more information on startup business loans.

For businesses with a year or more of history and revenue, you have more financing options, including SBA loans, term loans, business lines of credit and invoice factoring.

3. Determine the best type of small-business lender.

You can get small-business loans from several places, including banks, nonprofit microlenders and online lenders. These lenders offer products including term loans, lines of credit and accounts receivable financing.

You should approach small-business-loan shopping just as you would shopping for a car, says Suzanne Darden, a business consultant at the Alabama Small Business Development Center.

Once you determine which type of lender and financing vehicle are right for you, compare two or three similar options based on annual percentage rate (total borrowing cost) and terms. Of the loans you qualify for, choose the one with the lowest APR, as long as you are able to handle the loan's regular payments.

Use banks when:

- You can provide collateral.
- You have good credit.
- You don't need cash fast.

Traditional bank options include term loans, lines of credit and commercial mortgages to buy properties or refinance. Through banks, the U.S.

Small Business Administration provides general small-business loans with its 7(a) loan program, short-term microloans and disaster loans. SBA loans range from about $5,000 to $5 million, with an average loan size of $371,000.

Small businesses have a tougher time getting approved due to factors including lower sales volume and cash reserves; add to that bad personal credit or no collateral (such as real estate to secure a loan), and many small-business owners come up empty-handed. Getting funded takes longer than other options — typically two to six months — but banks are usually your lowest-APR option.

Use microlenders when:

- You can't get a traditional loan because your company is too small.

women to join their ranks. The National Association of Women in Construction, for example, partners with several councils, education programs and associations to develop training and education initiatives.

Companies can revisit their apprenticeship, training, and recruitment initiatives to evaluate how they work with established best practices. Cultural changes like removing gendered language from job listings, developing family-friendly benefits and creating inclusive branding can help women feel that these career opportunities speak to their needs and professional goals.

Looking Toward 2020

Assuming the economy and demand for construction continues as it has been for the last decade, we're likely to see a lot more women in the industry. By the early 2020s, the number could reach beyond the 2006 figure of over 1 million.

The change is slow but progressing at a steady pace. Moving one step at a time keeps us going forward.

Micro lenders are nonprofits that typically lend short-term loans of less than $35,000. The APR on these loans is typically higher than that of bank loans. The application may require a detailed business plan and financial statements, as well as a description of what the loan will be used for, making it a lengthy process.

Also, the size of the loans is, by definition, "micro." But these loans may work well for smaller companies or startups that can't qualify for traditional bank loans, due to a limited operating history, poor personal credit or a lack of collateral.

Popular micro lenders include Accion Kiva, the Opportunity Fund and the Business Center for New Americans.

Use online lenders when:

- You lack collateral.
- You lack time in business.
- You need funding quickly.

Online lenders provide small-business loans and lines of credit from $500 to $500,000. The average APR on these loans ranges from 7% to 108%, depending on the lender, the type and size of the loan, the length of the repayment term, the borrower's credit history and whether collateral is required. These lenders rarely can compete with traditional banks in terms of APR.

But approval rates are higher and funding is faster than with traditional banks — as fast as 24 hours. See NerdWallet's reviews of online business lenders.

4. Find out if you qualify.

WHAT'S YOUR CREDIT SCORE?

Your place on the credit spectrum is one factor that will determine which loans you'll qualify for. You can get your credit report for free from each of the three major credit bureaus — Equifax, Experian and TransUnion — once a year. You can get your credit score for free from several credit card issuers as well as personal finance websites, including NerdWallet.

Banks, which as previously noted offer the least expensive small-business loans, want borrowers with credit scores at least above 680, Darden says. If your credit score falls below that threshold, consider online small-business loans for borrowers with bad credit or loans from a non-profit micro lender.

HOW LONG HAVE YOU BEEN IN BUSINESS?

In addition to your credit score, lenders will consider how long your business has been operating. You need to have been in business at least one year to qualify for most online small-business loans and at least two years to qualify for most bank loans.

DO YOU MAKE ENOUGH MONEY?

Many online lenders require a minimum annual revenue, which can range anywhere from $50,000 to $150,000. Know yours and find out the minimum a given lender requires before you apply.

CAN YOU MAKE THE PAYMENTS?

Look carefully at your business's financials — especially cash flow — and evaluate how much you can reasonably afford to apply toward loan repayments each month. Some online lenders require daily or twice-monthly repayments, so factor that into the equation if that's the case.

To comfortably repay your loan each month, your total income should be at least 1.25 times your total expenses, including your new repayment amount, Darden says. For example, if your business's income is $10,000 a month and you have $7,000 worth of expenses including rent, payroll, inventory, etc., the most you can comfortably afford is $1,000 a month in loan repayments. You can use NerdWallet's business loan calculator to determine your loan's affordability.

5. Gather your documents.

Once you've compared your options, it's time to apply for the loans that fit your financing needs and that you qualify for.

You can apply for multiple small-business loans within a short time frame (about two weeks) without a negative effect on your personal credit score.

Depending on the lender, you'll need to submit a combination of the following documents with your application:

- Business and personal tax returns
- Business and personal bank statements
- Business financial statements
- Business legal documents (e.g., articles of incorporation, commercial lease, franchise agreement).

8 Marketing Resolutions for 2020

[Article was originally posted www.sba.gov]

By Rieva Lesonsky,

According to a report from Mailchimp 31% of small business owners say marketing is their number-one challenge. Here are marketing resolutions for 2020 to help you find the solutions.

Resolution #1: Resolve to integrate your marketing.

Far too many small business segregate their marketing into siloes and don't cross-promote within their various channels. Instead connect your marketing methods (search engine marketing, mobile, email, content, voice, direct mail, public relations, advertising, social media, etc.) with one another—all leading back to your business and/or your website.

Resolution # 2: Resolve to broaden your definition of content marketing.

Content marketing today goes beyond words. It includes infographics, podcasts, video, etc. Essentially, if it involves media, it's content.

Effective content marketing puts your customer's needs first. As the Content Marketing Institute's B2B report shows, 90% of the most successful content marketers put their audience's information needs ahead of their own promotional messages.

Resolution #3: Resolve to increase your commitment to video marketing.

Search Engine Journal says, "With the popularity of YouTube, dynamic imagery, and AR, video content and visual storytelling will continue to rise in 2020.

According to HubSpot, 56% of 25-34-year-olds and 54% of 35-44-year-olds want to see more video content from brands they support

Resolution #4: Resolve to personalize your email marketing campaigns.

Today 91% of internet users send emails, which is one reason email is still the most effective marketing method. For every dollar they spend on email, businesses get $32 back, according to the DMA.

Even more effective than just sending the same email to everyone on your list, is to send personalized emails. However most businesses aren't personalizing their emails. Here's why you should, per Instapage:

- When an email is not personalized, 52% of customers say they'll find somewhere else to go.
- 82% of marketers have reported an increase in open rates through email personalization.
- 75% of marketers believe personalization yields higher click-through rates.
- 74% of marketers say targeted messages and personalization of emails improves customer engagement rates.
- Personalized email marketing generates a median ROI of 122%.
- Businesses using email personalization generate 17% more revenue through their campaigns than the average marketer.

Resolution #5: Resolve to always test.

Testing is key to marketing success. It's the best way to know if what you're doing is still working or if it can be improved upon. Mailchimp says you can even learn from unsuccessful campaigns. The idea is to explore and discover new ideas and then, "test, learn, iterate and repeat."

Resolution #6: Resolve to use technology.

According to The Performance of Small and Medium Sized Businesses in a Digital World from Deloitte:

- 85% of small businesses say using digital tools help their businesses
- Small businesses that use digital tools are 3 times more likely to experience customer growth
- Small businesses that use digital tools are 2 times as profitable.
- 90% of all small businesses believe digital tools have fostered innovation in their business

Resolution #7: Resolve to use micro-influencers.

HubSpot reports:

- Micro-influencers are more effective than you likely think—82% of consumers responding to a survey, say they're "highly likely to follow a micro-influencer's recommendation".
- Micro-influencers discuss potential products and services more than the average consumer—they have 22.2 times more weekly conversations.
- Micro-influencers may have fewer followers than more high-profile influencers, but this generally "leads to higher engagement and greater trust."

If you sell B2B:

Resolution #8: Review how you connect to B2B buyers.

B2B buyers have changed—71% of B2B executives say they increasingly want B2C-like experiences.

- 65% rely on peer recommendations and 54% turn to review sites & social media
- On social platforms buyers browse discussions and learn more about a topic, ask for suggestions & recommendations from other users, reach out to thought leaders & connect directly with potential vendors
- B2B buyers want vendors to share relevant content that speaks directly to their needs.

Make sure to add using social media, keeping track of your competitors' activities, and staying on top of marketing innovations to your resolution list and you should be able to take 2020 by storm.

Care to Establish and Succeed in a Remote Career? Here's What to Focus Upon

Still, through telecommuting, you'll be able to do so, and much more.

Also, if you are a student, a remote career is one of the few options to succeed in balancing school and work. Many people put themselves through school using the remote work model, which is amazing - you can sharpen your skills while not letting your diploma suffer.

Working 9-to-5 still costs a pretty penny, so you will be able to save up. Most of us who once had to punch clocks in the office a lot of times had to pick up a cup of coffee from a drive-thru, order lunch at work, pitch in for different occasions, and even get some supplies from our own pockets.

Since you no longer have to do this, make sure to put all these costs on paper, and set that money aside in a piggy bank. You can use it for enrolling in a cooking class, trying pottery, starting yoga - anything that could benefit your mind and soul.

Take care of yourself and stay content; you'll see your days get much brighter, and your productivity will blast off!

Last but certainly not the least - travel if you can. Experiences you gain from traveling can change your life fundamentally. You'll see yourself getting more openminded, culturally and intellectually richer, satisfied, and, of course, grateful that your career does not suffer. If you work remotely, you can work from anywhere in the world. Use this advantage to its full potential.

Conclusion

With everything said, it comes to no surprise as to why remote work is gaining such vigorous momentum. Points mentioned above are something everyone wishes for in their professional lives. You can do it as well. Just remember - once you try it, use it to the max!
