

The Fastest-Growing Jobs in Construction

[ Article originally appeared in <https://constructioncoverage.com> ]

By Jonathan Jones

Despite recent inflation, high interest rates, and persistent recession fears, the outlook for the construction industry in the next few years appears positive.

A January 2024 report from the American Institute of Architects projects a 4% growth in non-residential construction in 2024 after already increasing an impressive 22% in 2023. Residential construction experienced dramatic declines in 2022 as rising costs mounted, but these declines came off of record-high activity the prior two years, and more recently, privately-owned housing permits increased by 8.6% year-over-year in January. With the industry also experiencing a workforce shortage, job growth in construction is projected to be steady.

High demand for construction across the board has helped boost the industry over the past three years, and could help construction companies weather a potential recession. The dramatic run-up in home values and rents highlighted the need to add residential housing supply, while the federal government has also been investing heavily in construction and infrastructure in recent years. A series of COVID-19 relief packages in 2020 and 2021 has sent billions of dollars flowing to the industry, but the centerpiece of federal investment was a $1.9 trillion infrastructure bill signed into law in late 2021. The bipartisan package will fund major new construction projects in transportation, telecommunication, energy, and more for years to come.

Changes in Construction Employment Over Time

Heightened demand and investment in the construction industry has translated to strong employment numbers. Construction was not as hard-hit as other parts of the economy by mass layoffs at the outset of the COVID-19 pandemic, and the industry also recovered jobs more quickly. Construction employment had a strong bounceback after lockdowns and other restrictions began to ease in the late spring of 2020, and has continued to grow since then. Notably, employment in the industry passed pre-pandemic levels in February 2022, three months before the economy as a whole hit the same milestone.

Employment Growth Projections by Industry

In part because of the construction industry's faster COVID-19 recovery, the Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates that job growth in the construction industry will be slower than average over the next decade. Construction employment is projected to grow just 1.5% from 2022 to 2032, compared to an average 2.8% rate of job growth across all industries. Another reason for below-average projected growth is that technological changes in the industry are poised to make many processes more efficient and less labor-intensive, which will in turn change the composition of jobs in the industry.

Because of this, as the industry changes and modernizes, many of the professions set for the greatest rate of growth are in fact jobs not commonly associated with construction. For example, demand for market research analysts, software developers, logisticians, and financial managers in the construction sector is projected to be robust in the coming years. But construction industry jobs with the greatest projected growth rates are related to renewable energy—including wind and solar.

Below is a complete breakdown of the fastest-growing jobs in the construction industry across over 190 occupations. The analysis was conducted by researchers at Construction Coverage using the latest data from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. For more information on how each metric was calculated, refer to the methodology section below.

Newsom, Legislature get a $17 billion jump on California budget deficit

 Article originally appeared in [www.calmatters.org ]

By Alexei Koseff, CalMatters

Salary savings from open positions in state government, cutting welfare programs that serve tens of thousands of families, delaying funding for public transit — these are some of the first steps that California officials plan to take to deal with a looming multibillion-dollar budget deficit.

Facing a shortfall estimated at somewhere between $38 billion and $73 billion next year, Gov. Gavin Newsom and legislative leaders announced today an “early action” plan to tackle part of that gap before the regular budget process later this spring.

The $17.3 billion package includes some program cuts, but mostly relies on new revenue, internal borrowing and funding delays and shifts for savings. It is expected to come up for a vote in the Legislature next week.

“I thank our legislative leaders for their partnership in taking this major step to address the shortfall with a balanced approach that meets the needs of Californians and maintains a strong fiscal foundation for the state’s future,” Newsom, who has been calling for early budget action since January, said in a statement.

Newsom, Senate President Pro Tem Mike McGuire of Santa Rosa and Assembly Speaker Robert Rivas of Salinas, all Democrats, signaled two weeks ago that they planned to take this step, but continued to negotiate the details. Cuts to housing and homeless programs that Assembly Democrats objected to were recently removed.

Among the major proposals are a nearly $4 billion expansion of a tax on health insurance plans that allows the state to draw matching federal funds; delaying $1 billion for transit infrastructure and $550 million for preschool, transitional kindergarten and full-day kindergarten facilities; shifting $1.8 billion of cap-and-trade revenue, intended to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, to backfill other programs; and reducing funding for state departments by more than $760 million, based on their vacant positions, while deferring another $1.6 billion in employee pay.

The strategy faces criticism from Republicans, who called it “gimmicky,” though they do not have the votes to block the plan, which requires only a simple majority.

“This deal is a swing and a miss from Democrats. California’s budget has major league problems and Newsom is proposing JV solutions,” Assembly Republican Leader James Gallagher of Chico said in a statement. “With a $73 billion deficit, this gimmicky agreement is not the homerun Gavin thinks it is.”

Under the early action plan, a school facilities program and several climate initiatives will be cut, as will about $337 million in remaining funding for two welfare services that subsidize employment and that provide cash assistance, transitional housing and counseling to families in crisis.

It also includes language to freeze one-time funding from past years and an agreement to tap into half of the state’s reserves in the upcoming budget.

“We are all committed to delivering an on-time balanced budget and this early action agreement is a critical first step to shrink the state’s shortfall,” McGuire said in a statement.

They are far from finished. Next up, Newsom will present his revised budget proposal in May. That will kick off a month of deliberation with the Legislature, which must pass a balanced budget by June 15 or forgo its pay.

“We expect the Governor to deliver challenging budget proposals next month to reduce the deficit in the long-term, and we’ll consider them carefully,” Rivas said in a statement. “Together, we can deliver real solutions for hard-working Californians.”
