What to the Slave Is the Fourth of July?

[Article originally appeared in www.pbs.org]

By Frederick Douglass

Fellow Citizens, I am not wanting in respect for the fathers of this republic. The signers of the Declaration of Independence were brave men. They were great men, too great enough to give frame to a great age. It does not often happen to a nation to raise, at one time, such a number of truly great men. The point from which I am compelled to view them is not, certainly, the most favorable; and yet I cannot contemplate their great deeds with less than admiration. They were statesmen, patriots and heroes, and for the good they did, and the principles they contended for, I will unite with you to honor their memory....

...Fellow-citizens, pardon me, allow me to ask, why am I called upon to speak here to-day? What have I, or those I represent, to do with your national independence? Are the great principles of political freedom and of natural justice, embodied in that Declaration of Independence, extended to us? and am I, therefore, called upon to bring our humble offering to the national altar, and to confess the benefits and express devout gratitude for the blessings resulting from your independence to us?

Would to God, both for your sakes and ours, that an affirmative answer could be truthfully returned to these questions! Then would my task be light, and my burden easy and delightful.

Frederick Douglass circa 1879

For who is there so cold, that a nation's sympathy could not warm him? Who so obdurate and dead to the claims of gratitude, that would not thankfully acknowledge such priceless benefits? Who so stolid and selfish, that would not give his voice to swell the hallelujahs of a nation's jubilee, when the chains of servitude had been torn from his limbs? I am not that man. In a case like that, the dumb might eloquently speak, and the "lame man leap as an hart." But such is not the state of the case. I say it with a sad sense of the disparity between us. I am not included within the pale of glorious anniversary! Your high independence only reveals the immeasurable distance between us. The blessings in which you, this day, rejoice, are not enjoyed in common. The rich inheritance of justice, liberty, prosperity and independence, bequeathed by your fathers, is shared by you, not by me. The sunlight that brought light and healing to you, has brought stripes and death to me. This Fourth July is yours, not mine. You may rejoice, I must mourn. To drag a man in fetters into the grand illuminated temple of liberty, and call upon him to join you in joyous anthems, were inhuman mockery and sacrilegious irony. Do you mean, citizens, to mock me, by asking me to speak to-day? If so, there is a parallel to your conduct. And let me warn you that it is dangerous to copy the example of a nation whose crimes, towering up to heaven, were thrown down by the breath of the Almighty, burying that nation in irrevocable ruin! I can to-day take up the plaintive lament of a peeled and woe-smitten people!

"By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down. Yea! we wept when we remembered Zion. We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof. For there, they that carried us away captive, required of us a song; and they who wasted us required of us mirth, saying, Sing us one of the songs of Zion. How can we sing the Lord's song in a strange land? If I forget thee, 0 Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth."

Fellow-citizens, above your national, tumultuous joy, I hear the mournful wail of millions! whose chains, heavy and grievous yesterday, are, to-day, rendered more intolerable by the

How Building Safety Needs Are Advancing Technology Innovations

[Article originally appeared in www.constructionexec.com]

By International Code Council

During Building Safety Month 2025, Joan O'Neil, executive vice president and chief knowledge officer at the International Code Council, sat down with CE to share her expert insights on how technologies like AI and building information modeling are streamlining code compliance, accelerating decision-making and equipping professionals with smarter tools. While Building Safety Month is an annual campaign to raise awareness about the importance of modern building codes, the International Code Council takes moments throughout the year to spotlight the future of building safety. Poised for transformation, the industry is on the cutting edge of trends in artificial intelligence, digitization and global collaboration.

How has building safety (technology, AI, awareness, tactics, guidelines) evolved over time?

The building safety industry has long been driven by innovation, from early computer-aided design tools to today's sophisticated building information modeling systems. BIM, in particular, revolutionized collaboration across disciplines

PRSRT STD U.S. Postage PAID San Fran CA 941 Permit No. 820 by allowing architects, engineers and contractors to work from a shared digital model. Now, the rise of artificial intelligence is pushing us even further, and the whole ecosystem is evolving.

AI helps professionals access and interpret vast amounts of code information more quickly and accurately. For example, the Code Council's AI Navigator tool, which is built on ChatGPT technology and trained specifically on our code content, enables users to ask complex questions and get trusted, highly accurate responses. While AI does not replace the human expert, it certainly empowers professionals to work more efficiently and make informed decisions faster.

What is driving this evolution in building safety, particularly in terms of modern technologies and external stressors like climate events or material changes?

Today's professionals are navigating a fast-moving, complex world. Natural disasters, climaterelated risks and new construction materials all demand information at a faster pace. That means access to reliable information in real time is no longer a luxury: It is essential. Technology and AI are playing a vital role here, making information more accessible and enabling predictive insights. AI can spot risk patterns and analyze historical data to inform better decision-making, especially in high-stakes environments where safety is critical.

Have the requirements for building safety professionals changed with the adoption of new tools and technology?

While information is now more accessible thanks to tools such as ICC Digital Codes, compliance calculators and AI-powered platforms, the job still requires a deep understanding of the technical material. Technology accelerates learning and improves accessibility, but it does not eliminate the need for proper training, credentialing and ongoing education.

Our goal is to make complex information easier to understand and apply, so professionals can pass exams more efficiently, stay code-compliant and keep communities safer.

Newsom and Legislature tangle with construction unions over minimum wage

[Article originally appeared in https://calmatters.org]

By Ben Christopher, CalMatters

California lawmakers are on the cusp of striking a last-minute deal to tie one of the year's most ambitious and controversial housing bills to a new set of minimum wages for housing construction workers — a proposal that has thrown a wrench into budget negotiations just days before the deadline.

The new legislative language, buried in a sprawling budget bill put into print on Tuesday, represents a grand political bargain between prodevelopment advocates and the state's carpenters union. Supporters say the new arrangement could reshape the way that future California housing legislation is written and negotiated.

There is intense opposition from other building trades unions, which are among the most powerful interest groups at the state Capitol and whose leaders argue that the bill would undercut hard-fought pay standards. That's made for a high-stakes showdown as Gov. Gavin Newsom demands major changes to streamline housing construction as part of the budget.

The new wage rates are a major pivot in a debate that has dominated the legislative politics of housing in California for at least a decade. Past bills aimed at making it easier to build new homes have offered a trade: Ease regulations on approvals, permits and environmental regulations in exchange for, among other things, higher guaranteed pay for construction workers. The standard wage rate in those debates have been the "prevailing wages" — state-determined wages that vary by occupation and location that generally work out to what unionized workers earn.

These new proposed rates are significantly lower and are designed to serve as a more developmentfriendly alternative. They would apply only in cases where developers opt to use a new proposed exception to California's premier environmental impact law, the California Environmental Quality Act. The vast majority of those projects, smallscale residential construction projects, are not currently covered by prevailing wage.

That's why supporters of the deal are arguing that the new standards represent a wage increase.

2025 Policy Agenda: A Greenlined Legislative Strategy Matters Now More Than Ever

[Article originally appeared in https://greenlining.org]

At The Greenlining Institute, we believe policy change can be a powerful tool to dismantle systemic racism and build a just, inclusive economy. Our legislative strategy is one way we turn that belief into reality. Through community-driven advocacy, coalition-building, and holding lawmakers accountable, we fight to ensure that California leads the nation in policies that center racial, economic, and climate equity.

This work is never easy, but it is especially urgent now.

As we mark the first 100 days of Trump's second administration — a period already marked by attacks on the foundations our communities rely on — California must act swiftly to safeguard the rights, resources, and futures of communities of color. Our communities have never had the luxury of waiting for Washington to lead, and the past 100 days are a stark reminder that the task ahead will be difficult, but necessary.

Much of our legislative agenda this year addresses the threats communities of color face due to federal inaction at best or intentional harm at worst: rollbacks to civil rights enforcement, climate policy reversals, and weakening of agencies meant to protect everyday people from greed and corruption. When the federal government steps back, states must step up. That's what Greenlining is here to push California to do.

Greenlined Policies

Our approach is guided by the concept of Greenlined policies — those that actively invest in formerly redlined communities of color, ensure government accountability, and remove barriers to opportunity.

Greenlined policies:

- Drive investments into communities of color that bear the long-term effects of historic disinvestment and redlining
- Ensure transparency in how policy and budget decisions impact Californians, with a focus on identifying and addressing inequities in communities of color
- Hold state agencies and lawmakers accountable to equitable outcomes
- Build strength and capacity in communities of color by removing barriers and expanding access to resources, opportunity, and decision-making power

Legislation is prime soil for these ideas to take root and grow. In the face of federal retrenchment, Greenlining's team uses California's policy process to create bold, equity-centered solutions that can be models for the nation. Legislation We're Championing in 2025

Our 2025 legislative priorities are a direct response to the challenges our communities are facing, and the opportunities we see to build long-term resilience. Here are our top priorities in 2025:

[Co-sponsored Legislation] AB 1132 – Roads to Resilience Act (Schiavo): This bill would require transportation planning to incorporate equity and climate resilience by assessing how climate impacts to transportation infrastructure affect the well-being of communities. It would ensure evacuation routes, infrastructure investments, and disaster response strategies protect the people who rely on them most — especially underserved communities.

Building Safety Needs

What do most people take for granted about building safety?

There is a vast, often invisible ecosystem that keeps people safe, from the initial code development process to on-the-ground enforcement. Many professionals and average citizens do not realize the enormous voluntary effort behind code development or the depth of technical expertise that goes into ensuring buildings are safe.

Building safety is not just about following rules; it's about protecting lives. Whether you are in a school, hospital or office building, you're benefiting from a complex, thoughtfully designed system that exists largely behind the scenes

WHAT THEY'RE SAYING: Downtown Leaders Reflect on Shine LA Event's Significance in Downtown Neighborhoods

[Article originally appeared in https://mayor.lacity.gov]

Mayor Karen Bass joined Angelenos, community leaders and elected officials for Shine LA to revitalize areas recently vandalized by bad actors who took advantage of the federal government's chaotic escalation of the reckless raids in Los Angeles. As the administration attempts to divide Angelenos, Mayor Bass' Shine LA movement serves as a powerful symbol of unity, civic pride and the unwavering perseverance of this city. Hear what Downtown leaders are saying about the significance of Shine LA in their communities.

California State Assemblymember Mark Gonzalez

"I stood alongside Mayor Bass and Angelenos from every corner of our City to show that Los Angeles will not be divided by fear or intimidation. As we work to recover from the harm caused by reckless raids and vandalism, we come together – not just to clean up, but to stand up for our communities. Shine LA is a reflection of our City's unity, strength and pride. We're here to say loud and clear: DTLA is open for business, our people are resilient, and LA shines brightest when we stand together."

Los Angeles City Councilmember Ysabel Jurado

"I'm proud to see our community show up for one another with purpose and heart, a reminder that care and connection are stronger than any challenge we face. This is the spirit of Downtown LA in action.

Cassy Horton, Co-Founder, Downtown LA Residents Association

"Downtown is for every Angeleno, and events like Shine LA remind us that supporting Downtown isn't just good for the neighborhood, it's good for all of LA. DTLA is a diverse, vibrant residential neighborhood of 90,000 people 30,000 of whom are immigrants. Our neighbors, small business owners, and entire community is facing an especially difficult moment right now. Downtowners are resilient, but we can't navigate this moment alone. That's why having a Shine LA event focused on DTLA was especially timely and important. It gave locals and fellow Angelenos the chance to stand together and do some good in the heart of our city. We're grateful for Mayor Karen Bass, the City team, Council Member Ysabel Jurado. and Assemblymember Mark Gonzalez for shining a light on our home, and we hope that we can keep the investment, collaboration and care going.

Nella McOsker, CEO, Central City Association of Los Angeles

"Shine LA is a positive way for Angelenos to come together and care for our unique neighborhoods. Downtown LA, home to a thriving residential and business community, continues to face ongoing challenges — from immigration raids to general perceptions of safety. CCA was proud to support this event and highlight continued investments needed for Downtown's success.

Blair Besten, Executive Director, Historic Core Business Improvement District

"It is always amazing when we have an opportunity to demonstrate how much of a community we are in Downtown LA. Thanks to our city leaders and the people that gave up a Saturday morning to make Spring Street Park shine!

A Greenlined Legislative Strategy

munity Reinvestment Act (CRA) to ensure that all financial institutions, including nonbanks, fintechs, and mortgage lenders, support and invest equitably in California's communities. As the federal protections are weakened or rolled back, California can and must lead with a stronger, more inclusive framework.

[Supported Legislation] AB 1018 – Automated Decisions Safety Act (Bauer-Kahan): From hiring to housing, automated decision systems increasingly shape outcomes that affect people's lives. AB 1018 would bring transparency, oversight, and fairness to these tools, ensuring that racial bias and discrimination are not embedded into the algorithms driving our economy.

Each of these bills addresses a different challenge, but they all reflect our core belief: policy and government must be a force for equity, not inequality.

Why This Moment Demands Action

The return of Trump to power signals a dangerous rollback of hard-won protections for communities of color and other marginalized communities. Already, federal regulators are threatening to rescind long-overdue updates to the Community Reinvestment Act. The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau is under attack. Environmental justice regulations are being weakened, and civil rights enforcement is being cut off at the knees. At the same time, the administration is signaling hostility toward nonprofit organizations especially those that speak truth to power - through threats of executive action and efforts to chill dissent

This isn't a repeat — it's an escalation. The current iteration of the Trump administration is acting with greater speed and strategy to dismantle civil rights protections, environmental safeguards, and the equity infrastructure our communities have fought to build. In this moment, states like California must once again step into the gap. We have both the moral responsibility and the policy tools to lead but only if we remain organized, strategic, and unapologetic in our commitment to race-conscious solutions. Holding the line now positions us to not only defend our gains, but to build momentum for the just future we know is possible.

The Path Forward

Our legislative strategy is more than a list of bills. It's about building power alongside communities, pushing institutions to change, and showing what's possible when equity is a guiding principle rather than an afterthought.

We know the road ahead is challenging. But we also know this: change happens when we fight for it. And Greenlining will keep fighting to ensure that the people and places most impacted by inequity are at the center of the solutions.

jubilee shouts that reach them. If I do forget, if I do not faithfully remember those bleeding children of sorrow this day, "may my right hand forget her cunning, and may my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth!" To forget them, to pass lightly over their wrongs, and to chime in with the popular theme, would be treason most scandalous and shocking, and would make me a reproach before God and the world. My subject, then, fellow-citizens, is American slavery. I shall see this day and its popular characteristics from the slave's point of view. Standing there identified with the American bondman, making his wrongs mine, I do not hesitate to declare, with all my soul, that the character and conduct of this nation never looked blacker to me than on this 4th of July! Whether we turn to the declarations of the past, or to the professions of the present the conduct of the nation seems equally hideous and revolting. America.is false to the past, false to the present, and solemnly binds herself to be false to the future. Standing with God and the crushed and bleeding slave on this occasion, I will, in the name of humanity which is outraged, in the name of liberty which is fettered, in the name of the constitution and the Bible which are disregarded and trampled upon, dare to call in question and to denounce, with all the emphasis I can command, everything that serves to perpetuate slavery \tilde{N} the great sin and shame of America! "I will not equivocate; I will not excuse"; I will use the severest language I can command; and yet not one word shall escape me that any man, whose judgment is not blinded by prejudice, or who is not at heart a slaveholder, shall not confess to be right and just.

But I fancy I hear some one of my audience say. "It is just in this circumstance that you and your brother abolitionists fail to make a favorable impression on the public mind. Would you argue more, an denounce less; would you persuade more, and rebuke less; your cause would be much more likely to succeed." But, I submit, where all is plain there is nothing to be argued. What point in the anti-slavery creed would you have me argue? On what branch of the subject do the people of this country need light? Must I undertake to prove that the slave is a man? That point is conceded already. Nobody doubts it. The slaveholders themselves acknowledge it in the enactment of laws for their government. They acknowledge it when they punish disobedience on the part of the slave. There are seventy-two crimes in the State of Virginia which, if committed by a black man (no matter how ignorant he be), subject him to the punishment of death; while only two of the same crimes will subject a white man to the like punishment. What is this but the acknowledgment that the slave is a moral, intellectual, and responsible being? The manhood of the slave is conceded. It is admitted in the fact that Southern statute books are covered with enactments forbidding, under severe fines and penalties, the teaching of the slave to read or to write. When you can point to any such laws in reference to the beasts of the field, then I may consent to argue the manhood of the slave. When the dogs in your streets, when the fowls of the air, when the cattle on your hills, when the fish of the sea, and the reptiles that crawl, shall be unable to distinguish the slave from a brute then will I argue with you that the slave is a man!

The Road Ahead: What Congress Must Prioritize in Next Infrastructure Bill

[Article originally appeared in www.uschamber.com]

By John Drake

With so much attention by lawmakers—and the public—on budget reconciliation, it's easy to forget that Congress is already hard at work on a new surface transportation and infrastructure law. This law will follow the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act (IIJA)—the largest federal investment in American infrastructure in half a century—and already States and other transportation stakeholders are anxiously tracking the fate of potentially hundreds of billions of dollars for our nation's roads, bridges, railways, transit systems, and ports as well as the future of the laws that govern the movement of our cars, trucks, railroads, and buses.

Each day, millions of American families and businesses rely on our nation's infrastructure for their mobility needs and to get goods to market. Years of underinvestment in our nation's infrastructure led to deferred maintenance and delays in projects critical to our nation's competitiveness and economic growth. Thankfully, as outlined in the American Society of Civil Engineers' "Report Card for America's Infrastructure," there has been recent improvement, underscoring the importance of continued progress.

Here are several priorities lawmakers must address in the next infrastructure bill to keep America's economic growth and competitiveness on the right track.

Bolster America's Economic Growth and Competitiveness Through Targeted Investments

America's roads, bridges, railways, transit systems, and ports are essential to our economy, moving people and freight efficiently around the country. New infrastructure investments must advance the totality of this transportation network to boost economic growth and strengthen our quality of life.

To do so, Congress should maintain funding levels that build on the investments of the previous reauthorization. We've seen federal investments successfully help fix freight traffic bottlenecks, improve road safety and ease congestion, and give states and regions the ability to rebuild and reimagine their communities. Lawmakers must continue that momentum to deliver these benefits to more communities across the nation. Cut Red Tape for Faster Progress

A substantial hurdle to building and improving infrastructure is the broken federal permitting process, which often adds years of delays and unnecessary costs. Lawmakers must prioritize streamlining and modernizing the permitting process, removing bureaucratic roadblocks that have stunted the building of infrastructure necessary to meet the needs of our modern society and compete globally.

The successful, fast-track completion of emergency projects like the I-95 rebuild in Philadelphia and Baltimore's Francis Scott Key Bridge shows that we can streamline processes and work more efficiently. By cutting red tape, we can unlock faster construction, lower costs, and fund more projects that enhance the quality of life for more American workers and families.

Safety and Reliability for the Long Haul

Americans need dependable infrastructure that ensures safety and efficiency for communities, businesses, and the economy. That means investing in roads, bridges, ports, and transit systems that are reliable against weather-related and man-made disruptions. As technology evolves, it offers new ways to shore up our infrastructure with technology solutions that strengthen our system, reduce future risks, and are built with longevity in mind.

Restore Stable Funding to Transportation Projects

Stable funding from Washington, D.C., provides states with the confidence to plan infrastructure investments over the long term. Historically, the federal government's contribution to these investments was generated by revenues from the gas tax—but the gas tax was last raised in 1993 despite rising construction costs and growing infrastructure needs. Increasingly, Congress is buying debt to make up the difference.

This is why we are calling on Congress to restore the "user fee" as the cornerstone of surface transportation funding. Congress must modernize the user fee to reflect the realities of rising construction costs, the improving fuel efficiency of gasoline-powered vehicles, and the growing share of electric vehicles traveling on our roads,.

Residential construction is "a virtually non-union industry," said Danny Curtin, who heads the California Conference of Carpenters. "You have the ability to give those people a substantial — a modest, but substantial and important — raise."

Even so, the pushback from other construction labor groups has been fierce.

The State Building and Construction Trades Council, a construction union umbrella group that regularly clashes with the carpenters union on labor issues, excoriated the proposal in a letter to legislative leadership yesterday.

"This proposal is a wage grab of construction workers' wages disguised in an 'affordable housing bill," the letter by council president Chris Hannan said. "We urge you to abandon any pursuit of this harmful and unprecedented proposal, which would devastate construction workers."

Lawmakers also appeared caught off guard by the proposal at an Assembly budget hearing on Wednesday packed with union advocates.

"I didn't come to Sacramento to cut people's wages," said Assemblymember Chris Rogers, a Ukiah Democrat. "I didn't sit through months of budget committee hearings talking about how to preserve our social safety net to then, at the 11th hour, potentially kick more people onto it."

Assemblymember Lashae Sharp Collins, a Democrat from La Mesa, called the fact that the building trades reportedly weren't consulted "appalling."

The new wage proposal received a similarly icy reception from many Democrats in the Senate, which also held a budget hearing on Wednesday.

"You're presenting something at the last minute, I don't know who you consulted with, and you reached this conclusion to completely change the structure for the way that workers in the construction industry would be paid," said Sen. Maria Elena Durazo, a Los Angeles Democrat and a reliable ally of the trades. The bill was scheduled to be voted on Friday. In the face of furious pushback a budget committee hearing vote in the Senate was delayed on Wednesday, making the timing of its final vote uncertain.

Though the last-minute addition of contentious labor language threatens to divide legislative Democrats, the party holds two-thirds of the seats in both legislative chambers, giving the budget bill ample opportunities to pass even with significant defections.

A debate months in the making

This new proposal is the latest addition to a policy idea introduced in March by Oakland Democratic Assemblymember Buffy Wicks. The bill would exempt most new apartment buildings in urban areas from CEQA, the environmental law.

The 55-year-old law is the frequent target of lawmakers and pro-housing advocates who argue that it can be weaponized to slow or impede desperately needed new housing and other projects. Many environmental advocacy groups and organized labor groups defend the law as an important check on unwanted or environmentally harmful development.

Wicks' idea got a helpful boost last month when Newsom opted to fold it into his proposed budget for the coming year, putting it on a speedier and surer path to becoming law. He has since threatened to withhold his signature from the budget if legislators do not approve the sweeping housing measures, some of which are still being negotiated.

A key part of that budget package — what's called a trailer bill — is before the Legislature now. The bill includes Wicks' exemption tied to the new labor language, along with key components of other housing bills, including a proposed freeze on building code changes, limits on the fees that landlords can charge tenants and an expanded tax credits for renters.

Assemblymember Nick Schultz, the Burbank Democrat who authored the building code freeze bill, noted that he wasn't informed by the governor's office or Assembly leadership that his proposal was being tucked into the budget bill. He said he found out from an advocacy group.

By setting wages far below the "prevailing wage" rates required by law for publicly funded projects — and frequently demanded by construction unions for their support for housing bills — it is meant to offer a more financially feasible alternative, while still boosting the pay of workers at the lowest end of the labor market.

In Oakland, for example, a carpenter making the state-set "prevailing wage" for a residential project earns at least $99 per hour including benefits.

The new minimum wages would only require that the majority of construction workers across the Bay Area covered under the policy be paid at least $40 an hour. Less skilled or experienced workers would require at least $27 per hour. Smaller housing projects of 25 units or fewer would be exempt entirely.

The budget bill also includes language that would give unions the right to take contractors to court for workers compensation, insurance and payroll tax violations.

"Yes in my backyard" advocates that have historically looked askance at prevailing wage requirements are celebrating the new deal.

"This is one of the biggest wins for housing in a generation," California YIMBY president Brian Hanlon said in a statement. "Building infill housing is not a threat to the environment — it's how we save it."

Carpenters and YIMBYs collaborate again

Though new wage rates only apply to Wicks' urban infill exemption, hammering out a deal with a major labor group allowing for pay significantly below prevailing wage would spell a significant shift in California labor policy.

This isn't the first time the state's carpenters union has cut a high-profile deal to push a major YIMBY-backed housing bill across the legislative finish line. In 2022, Wicks' bill to fast-track apartment construction along stripmall corridors earned the endorsement of the carpenters after she added a prevailing wage requirement, along with some other benefits.

At the time that was considered a political concession. For years the state's other major construction worker union group, the Trades Council, had made the inclusion of so-called skilled-and-trained standards — essentially, a requirement to hire predominantly unionized workers — the price of their support for housing bills.

In breaking with the trades, the carpenters have long argued that clearing the way for the construction of more housing, even at the expense of higher mandatory wages, represents an "organizing opportunity" for the union.

After Wicks' bill passed over the Trades Council's strenuous objection, other pro-development lawmakers came to see that deal as something they could effectively copy and paste into their housing legislation, all but guaranteeing the support of an unlikely coalition of developers, union workers and YIMBY activists.

Even so, many developers continue to argue that prevailing wage rates are still too costly to make construction pencil out beyond the state's priciest metro areas, making those prior housing bills ineffective at actually producing more housing.

Supporters of this new deal say the lower wage standard could be the next go-to legislative language for future housing bills.

"This bill is a big step forward and an important test of whether the 'YIMBY-Carpenter alliance' can enact housing bills that generate housing production at scale," UC Davis law professor Chris Elmendorf wrote on X.
