

4 reasons to hire veterans

[Article originally appeared in <https://beta.dol.gov>]

By Darnice Marsh

The Veterans’ Employment and Training Service works every day to enable all service members, veterans, and military spouses to reach their full potential in the workplace.

As a military spouse and former human resource professional, I have seen firsthand how veterans strengthen the workplaces they join. Here are four reasons employers should seek out veteran talent:

- Leadership that strengthens teams: Veterans lead by example, communicate clearly, and stay steady under pressure. They understand mission-driven teamwork, placing organizational goals above personal gain. That balance of leadership and humility is invaluable. It helps shape workplace culture by enabling employees to recognize when to step up and when to support others. This creates stronger, more collaborative, and resilient teams.
- Discipline and reliability you can count on: Discipline is foundational to military service. For veterans, discipline shows up as accountability, consistency, and commitment to excellence. Veterans show up ready, prepared, and dependable because in the military, reliability isn’t optional, it’s essential.
- Adaptability in a changing workplace: Veterans thrive in environments where change is constant. New missions, evolving technology, shifting priorities, and changes in leadership are a part of their military experience. They access situations quickly, pivot with confidence, and stay focused under pressure.
- A work ethic second to none: Military service instills persistence, grit, and an unshakable commitment to doing the job the right way. This work ethic transfers into the civilian workplace as reliability, consistency, and a refusal to cut corners. Veterans take ownership and inspire others day after day, task after task, mission after mission.

Veterans have already demonstrated their commitment to our country. Hiring them is not only an opportunity to honor that service, but also a

Construction Project Management in 2027

[Article originally appeared in www.constructconnect.com]

By Maila Kim

In short:

- Construction project management keeps the project plan aligned from preconstruction through closeout.
- Labor gaps and procurement delays remain major project risks heading into 2027. So do changing costs and incomplete information.
- Daily field checks and three-week look ahead planning help PMs act before problems reach the critical path.

Construction project management is the process of planning and controlling work from early design through closeout. It keeps the work plan aligned with the people, information, materials, and decisions needed to deliver the project.

For a project manager working in 2026, that definition is no longer enough. A PM must also protect the next milestone before a constraint becomes a delay. They must know whether the estimate still reflects field conditions. They must keep the team aligned when design information, labor, procurement, or owner direction changes.

What is construction project management?

Construction project management is the organized control of a project’s work, resources, and decisions. The construction project manager helps the team deliver the agreed scope within the available budget and schedule. They also coordinate quality, safety, contracts, and communication.

The work changes by project type and delivery method. A general contractor may focus on trade coordination and owner commitments. A specialty contractor may focus on production, labor, material flow, and change work. A preconstruction team may focus on scope, estimate risk, and constructability.

The goal is the same: make the next important decision with the best available information.

Why construction project management matters for 2027 jobs

The 2027 construction market will not move in one direction. Some sectors and regions will stay busy while others may face slower demand or stronger competition for work. That makes project-level planning more important than a national headline.

ConstructConnect reported $84.4 billion in U.S. nonresidential starts in July 2026. That was 14.8% higher year to date than the same period in 2025. The number is useful, but it needs context. July starts fell from June, and a small number of very large projects influenced the monthly total. Nonresidential building starts were up 20.6% year to date. Civil starts were up 5.7%. Read the full breakdown in July U.S. Nonresidential Construction Starts Up Nearly 15% Year-to-Date Versus 2025.

For a PM, a construction start is not the same as awarded work or available backlog. A strong national total does not tell you whether your market has enough work for your crews, whether your trade partners can staff the job, or whether a critical material will arrive on time. The useful question is not simply, “Is construction growing?” It is, “What work is likely to reach this project, and what will it take to deliver it?”

Labor data points to the same challenge. Construction employment grew by 22,000 jobs in July. Nonresidential specialty trades added 15,000 positions. Workers averaged 39.5 hours per week, compared with 34.3 hours across the private sector. These figures suggest strong demand for field labor and also signal pressure on staffing plans, wage assumptions, and overtime budgets. See the Construction Employment Update: August 2026 for the full analysis.

A worker may be available in the market without being available for your job. The crew may lack the right trade experience, arrive after the planned start, or cost more than the estimate assumed. Overtime may recover a milestone, but it can also increase cost and fatigue risk.

What construction project managers should do before setting the 2027 baseline

- Test the labor plan. Compare estimated production rates and labor costs with current subcontractor feedback, local availability, and the actual sequence of work.
- Protect the next milestones. Identify the trade partners, approvals, and materials that must be ready before each major activity can start. Assign an owner and decision date to every constraint.
- Build a response plan. Model what happens if labor costs rise, a design release slips, or a long-lead item misses its required-on-site date. Define the trigger for each recovery action.
- Forecast from job data. Review installed quantities, labor hours, commitments, and pending changes against the baseline each week. Use market data to challenge assumptions, not to replace project-level evidence.

The strongest 2027 PMs will use economic data as an early warning system, then convert that signal into a local staffing plan, a procurement plan, and a schedule the team can actually execute.

The construction management process

The process has different names across companies, but the main controls are consistent. The work starts before award and continues through closeout.

Sites Reservoir Project – Dams and Roads
Bid Proposal Submittal Date: September 23, 2026, at 5:00 P.M. PST
Owner: Sites Authority

Barnard Construction Company Inc. ("Barnard") as the Construction Manager at Risk (CMAR) is soliciting proposals for geotechnical investigation drilling at the Sites Reservoir Project near Maxwell, California. This formal solicitation will be awarded, for a firm fixed contract, to the lowest responsible and responsive bidder.
Barnard has been released to procure a subcontractor for a limited amount of geotechnical investigation that consists of obtaining samples from four (4) bore holes at three (3) locations along the right abutment of the future Golden Gate Dam facility. The geotechnical drilling scope of work is:
- Completion of four (4) rotary-wash core borings ranging from 100 to 289 feet in depth.
The drilling subcontractor is to provide the following associated with each core location.

- Two (2) bore holes are 100 feet deep each, one (1) bore hole is 250-feet deep, and one (1) bore hole is 289-feet deep
- Core size HQ 2.5-inch diameter
- Driller provides wooden core boxes for core samples
- Single stage packer testing at 20-foot intervals (4 of 4 locations)
- Televiwer measurements (4 of 4 locations)
- OYO suspension P-S logging (1 of 4 locations)
- Grouted Vibrating Wire Piezometer (2 of 4 locations)

Geotechnical drilling firms will be required to abide by the Project Labor Agreement established for the project which has been executed by Barnard, the State Building & Construction Trades Council of California, the Mid-Valley Building & Construction Trades Council, and the Signatory Craft Council and Unions.
To be considered for this work, a mandatory site visit will be held on Tuesday, September 15, 2026 starting at 10:00 am PST at 122 Old Highway 99 West, Maxwell California 95955. Only the firms that attend the mandatory site visit will be issued the Solicitation Documents required for the proposal submission.
The Solicitation Documents will include, but not be limited to:

- Commitment to be bound by the Project Labor Agreement (PLA)
- Confirmation the bidding firm has no pending complaints or litigation that could affect performance
- Confirmation the bidding firm is not suspended or debarred from performing work in California or for the Federal Government.
- Confirmation the bidding firm will provide 100% Payment and Performance bonds
- Qualifications and experience for the specific types of work required by the Solicitation Documents previously performed by the bidding firm.
- Provide valid California contractor's license
- The contract documents including the Main Contract between the Sites Authority and Barnard, subcontract agreement, PLA, and any specifications for the scope of work.
- Confirmation the bidding firm will enter into the subcontract agreement as provided in the Solicitation Documents.
- Bid form to be completed and submitted within bidding firms' proposal
- Other procurement documents, including the formal inquiry process to be used for clarification requests of the Solicitation Documents
- Bidding firms' execution schedule based on a mobilization date of no later than October 19, 2026
- Any addenda's, including responses of all the bidding firms requests for clarification, will be emailed directly to each bidding firm's point of contact.

Following the site visit, the Solicitation Documents will be emailed to each firm that attended the mandatory site visit by 5pm PST on September 16, 2026. Pricing and required information, as stated in the Solicitation Documents, shall be submitted via email by 5pm PST on September 23, 2026 to Sitesreservoir@barnard-inc.com. Notification of the selected proposer will be issued by September 28, 2026. Mobilization is expected to occur no later than October 19, 2026.

1. Build a reliable preconstruction plan

Preconstruction is the first project-control activity. It is where the team can still change scope, sequencing, and assumptions at a lower cost.

Start with the drawings, specifications, and contract requirements. Review the scope for gaps and unclear responsibilities. Then test the estimate against the planned means and methods.

Useful preconstruction work includes:

- Build material takeoffs and a construction cost estimate
- Check production rates, crew sizes, and equipment assumptions
- Identify long-lead items and required approval dates
- Confirm trade coverage and likely subcontractor capacity
- Record exclusions, allowances, escalation assumptions, and open questions
- Create a risk register with an owner and response for each major risk

Data-driven decision-making for preconstruction can help teams compare project information before they commit. The goal is not to collect more data, but to find the information that could change the estimate, schedule, or decision to pursue the work.

2. Make the handoff useful

A weak handoff creates field problems that were visible during estimating. The field team should receive more than the final budget and contract.

Carry forward the estimate basis, scope assumptions, bid clarifications, schedule logic, procurement commitments, and open decisions. Explain where the estimate depends on a production rate, allowance, or design assumption.

The handoff should also identify what still needs an answer. An unresolved question is easier to manage when it has a named owner and a due date.

3. Baseline the schedule and budget

The baseline is the reference point for measuring change. It should show the work sequence, major milestones, dependencies, and critical path. It should also show the planned use of labor, equipment, and materials.

A useful baseline connects the schedule to the budget and identifies cost codes, planned labor hours, cash-flow assumptions, and known commitments. It also includes required submittals, inspections, and owner decisions.

A baseline is not a promise that conditions will stay the same. It is the starting point for forecasting. When the plan changes, record why it changed and what the change affects. See 5 Tips to Keep Your Construction Project on Schedule for practical schedule habits.

4. Control procurement before it controls the job

Procurement risk often appears before the delivery date. An item may be late because the design is not approved, the submittal is incomplete, the purchase order is delayed, or fabrication has not started.

Track critical items from need to delivery. Record the required-on-site date, approval status, supplier, lead time, fabrication status, shipping status, and schedule effect of a delay. Review approved alternatives when they can protect the milestone without creating a new design or quality risk.

The PM should not wait for a missed delivery to ask what happened. A weekly procurement review should identify the next action and the date it must happen.

5. Coordinate production in the field

During construction, the PM turns the plan into coordinated work. That means confirming that predecessor work is complete, the area is accessible, the latest information is available, and the next trade can start.

Field reporting should capture what was installed, how many labor hours were used, what equipment was needed, and what stopped progress. It should also capture photos, inspections, delays, extra work, and decisions needed from the office.

A field report has value only when someone reviews it and acts on it. Use the information to update the schedule, cost forecast, risk register, and change log.
