

Construction Workforce Survey: Help Needed

By Associated General Contractors

Few candidates have the basic skills needed to work in high-paying construction careers, forcing short-staffed contractors to find new ways to keep pace with demand and undermining efforts to build infrastructure and other projects, according to the results of a 2023 workforce survey conducted by the Associated General Contractors of America and Autodesk. The results highlight significant shortcomings in the nation's approach to preparing workers for careers in construction.

"The biggest takeaway from this year's Workforce Survey is how much the nation is failing to prepare future workers for high-paying careers in fields like construction," said Ken Simonson, the association's chief economist. "It is time to rethink the way the nation educates and prepares workers."

Simonson noted that eighty-five percent of construction firms report they have open positions that they are trying to fill. Among those firms, eighty-eight percent are having trouble filling at least some of those positions—particularly among the craft workforce that performs the bulk of onsite construction work.

All types of firms are experiencing these challenges. Largely similar results were reported by contractors that use exclusively union craft labor and by firms that operate as open-shop employers; by firms with $50 million or less in annual revenue and ones with more than $500 million in revenue; by companies in all four regions of the country; and by contractors doing building construction, highway and transportation projects, federal and heavy work, or utility infrastructure.

One of the main reasons labor shortages are so severe, Simonson added, is that most job candidates are not qualified to work in the industry. He said that a "shocking" sixty-eight percent of firms report applicants lack the skills needed to work in construction. In addition, one third of firms report candidates cannot pass a drug test.

Workforce shortages are adding to the impacts of supply chain disruptions that have made it difficult for firms to get materials delivered on time and that are driving up the cost of those materials. While these shortages have recently shown signs of abating, sixty-five percent of firms report projects they work on have been delayed because of supply challenges and sixty-one percent have been delayed because of labor shortages.
